THINK ABOUT THIS

A PLACE TO FAIL

Ninety percent of parenting is mental, the other half is physical. In other words, it takes all of you and a little more. Parenting is no joke and lends itself to forming humans who can eventually wake up on their own, bathe themselves, sort out tasks for the day, and speak without grunts, groans, or whining. At least, that's the hope. Right? When parents come to me, it's usually not because everything is perfect in their world. (I've never met one of those parents.) It's usually because something isn't going well and they've run out of ideas and electronics to ban. It can be hard for parents to see how their child's current crisis can become a positive thing.
